Yemeni government forces say they're withdrawing from an area overlooking the Bab el-Mandeb Strait in a major boost to the Iran-backed Houthis. The Houthis seized the choke point at the mouth of the Red Sea in September, further squeezing oil exports from Asia to Europe. Katie Watson reports.

The decision to withdraw ends a six-week-long government offensive to try and keep control of an area seen as crucial for global shipping, especially with the challenges in the Strait of Hormuz. The Saudi-backed forces say they'll now focus on the defense of the interim capital and seat of government, Aden.

There, Houthis killed at least eight people on Sunday and wounded several others. Yemen's decade-long civil war had been dormant for around four years, but all that changed when the U.S.-Israeli war began and fighting between government forces and Iranian-backed Houthis intensified.

Pope Leo has spoken out against the killings of Indigenous leaders in land disputes and warned against the exploitation of the rainforest during a visit to the Peruvian Amazon.

Speaking in the city of Pucallpa, the pontiff said the killings were murders. He also warned that environmental damage was threatening both the rainforest and the people who depend on it. "Unfortunately, the voice that rises today from these places speaks to us of wounds that not only have not healed, but have actually worsened. The cry of the earth and the cry of the poor are inseparable, laying bare the logic of the market and of exploitation that put the very balance of creation at risk."

It's the final full day of Pope Leo's tour of South America.

The Mexican authorities say the notorious drug lord Miguel Ángel Félix Gallardo, who founded the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel, has died. He was 80. Will Grant has more.

The name Miguel Ángel Félix Gallardo will echo through the annals of drug trafficking history more than any other except perhaps Pablo Escobar's. Félix Gallardo was the head of the all-powerful Guadalajara Cartel, which revolutionized drug smuggling in the region by entering into partnership with the Colombian cartels.

In 1989, Félix Gallardo was captured and sentenced to decades in prison. In ill health, he had been placed under house arrest since 2022.

The British Prime Minister Andy Burnham is expected to set out a renewed vision for Britain's role in the world in a speech on Monday. He'll argue that Britain must rebuild alliances, lead with its values and demonstrate that standing up for what's right also serves the U.K.'s national interests.

He's also expected to push for a reset in Britain's relationship with Europe, saying the world has fundamentally changed since the Brexit referendum 10 years ago. It comes ahead of a second summit between Britain and the EU on Friday.

This is the world news from the BBC.

The U.S. Transport Secretary Sean Duffy has refused to apologize for Friday's nationwide airspace closure. The ground stop caused by a technical problem during a copper wire upgrade led to the cancellation of thousands of flights across the United States.

Mr. Duffy blamed previous governments for not doing enough to modernize the country's aging air traffic control system.

The Dutch Prime Minister Rob Yetten has held crisis talks with his coalition partners in an effort to avert the collapse of his minority government. The three-party coalition is split over whether to accept support from left-wing opposition parties in exchange for imposing higher taxes on the wealthy.

The fifth in line to the British throne, Prince Harry, has carried out a surprise visit to the city of Lviv in western Ukraine, where he's been meeting injured war veterans who are competing in the Invictus Games. Ukraine now has more than 150,000 badly injured veterans from the conflict. Sean Coughlan reports.

Prince Harry received an enthusiastic welcome for his two-day visit to the Ukrainian city of Lviv, where he appeared at a series of Invictus Games sports events for injured veterans. It wasn't an official royal visit, and he spoke more directly about the conflict, telling his Ukrainian audience, "You're going to win the war."

Technology has changed the face of this war, and also medical treatment for its victims. And Prince Harry visited the superhuman center near Lviv, which is developing new techniques for the growing number of seriously wounded casualties.

The former manager of London football club Arsenal, Arsène Wenger, has decided not to challenge FIFA boss Gianni Infantino for the top job in world football. Mr. Infantino's presidency was plunged into crisis by his failed plan to sell commercial stakes in the Football World Cup to private investors.

Mr. Infantino has the backing of football federations in South America, Africa and Asia.
