BBC NEWS

November 17, 2026

BBC News with Roisin Hastie.

Spain's prime minister has criticized a plan announced by five European Union countries to open a migrant deportation center in Rwanda, the first such facility outside the bloc. Pedro Sánchez said he could not see any humanity or future in the scheme. Denmark, Germany, the Netherlands, Austria and Greece earlier said the plan would enable them to deport foreign nationals, including failed asylum seekers who don't have legal status in the EU. Barbara Plett Usher is our Africa correspondent based in Nairobi.

Kigali continues to position itself as part of a creative solution to global migration problems and reports say it pitched itself aggressively to the Europeans. The five countries involved stressed they'll make sure that human rights are protected based on new EU regulations.

But critics still warn about Rwanda's human rights record. They say the government suppresses dissent, restricts political freedoms and free speech and that it won't be easy to independently monitor what's going on.

President Zelenskyy has appealed to Ukraine's European allies to send an increased number of more effective missiles.

Volodymyr Zelenskyy said that Russia was receiving dozens of missiles every month from North Korea and Kyiv needed to be able to respond on equal terms. "Europe has missiles capable of delivering truly effective strikes. Germany, France, Britain, Italy. We're discussing the need to counter Russia's global banditry, supported by its ally in Pyongyang, through increased supplies of corresponding weapons to Ukraine."

Mayor of Kyiv Vitali Klitschko says missiles have struck two bridges over the Dnipro River in the Ukrainian capital. They're the north and south bridges. Ukraine's air force says ballistic missiles were fired at Kyiv from Russian territory.

Meanwhile, the Russian-installed head of occupied Crimea says the Kerch Bridge linking the peninsula with Russia has again been attacked by Ukraine for the second night in a row.

An American forensic expert has told the BBC that his analysis of autopsy photos suggests the late convicted sex offender Jeffrey Epstein was killed in prison. Professor Michael Freeman said that after reviewing the medical examiner's file, he believes Epstein was strangled most likely from behind.

"There is a deep muscular hemorrhage to the left shoulder. There are injuries to the face that appear to be consistent with blunt force trauma, being struck in the face. There are even fingernail marks or the appearance of fingernail marks above the level of where the ligature is at the neck, which would be consistent with strangulation particularly from behind and the attempt by the victim to try to remove the ligature from the neck."

Epstein was found dead in 2019 in his New York prison cell. The medical examiner who carried out the autopsy concluded that Epstein's injuries were consistent with suicide by hanging.

BBC News.

California has sued the artificial intelligence company OpenAI following cyberattacks carried out by its models during training. The U.S. state where OpenAI is based is the first to file such a lawsuit.

California's Attorney General Rob Bonta accused the company of developing a dangerous product without adequate safety procedures or oversight.

The British Prime Minister Andy Burnham has said Britain has lost more than it gained from leaving the European Union. In a speech on foreign policy ahead of a UK-EU summit on Friday, Mr. Burnham likened the Brexit deal to the Emperor's new clothes - a reference to politicians' unwillingness to talk openly about the problems it had caused. Our political correspondent is Iain Watson.

The prime minister said the deal to leave the EU had left Britain worse off and damaged its standing in the world. In the short term, he hopes to improve, if only modestly, the existing deal at a summit with EU leaders later this week.

In the longer term, he says he wants discussions with European leaders about the options for Britain's future relationship with the EU, though he said there would be no major change between now and the next general election. But the Brexit debate is back.

Thousands of customers at a number of major U.S. banks, including JPMorgan Chase and Bank of America, are reporting technical problems and service outages. Some people have had difficulty accessing their accounts, while others have reported problems with the digital payments app.

Chase said there was a temporary issue related to a software bug, but it was not cyber-related or systemic.

The American carrier United Airlines says it's resolved a technology issue that delayed flight departures just days after a nationwide air traffic control outage caused widespread disruption to U.S. air travel. United said there was no indication that Monday's problem was cyber security related.

BBC News.